Probation Officers Assist Stranded Motorist

On June 4, 2025, following a community outreach event, Sr. DPO's Patrice Pratt and Erin Burton demonstrated quick thinking and compassion when they encountered a driver in distress on southbound Watt Avenue at I-80.

While in the Probation Outreach truck, Sr. DPO Pratt noticed a vehicle ahead with its hazard lights on attempting to pull over. To help prevent a traffic hazard, she activated her emergency lights and positioned the truck behind the stalled vehicle. The Outreach van followed suit and parked behind Pratt, also activating their emergency lights to alert other drivers.

The officers approached the driver to check if she needed assistance. The driver explained that she had run out of gas, was unfamiliar with the area, and felt nervous and scared. Officers Burton and Pratt reassured her she was safe and advised there was a gas station within walking distance. At the driver's request, they remained with her vehicle while she went to get fuel.

Shortly after, the driver returned, refueled her car, and was able to restart it without issue. She expressed sincere gratitude for the officers' support.

Kudos to Officers Burton and Pratt for going above and beyond to help a community member in need!

Northern California Construction Training (NCCT)

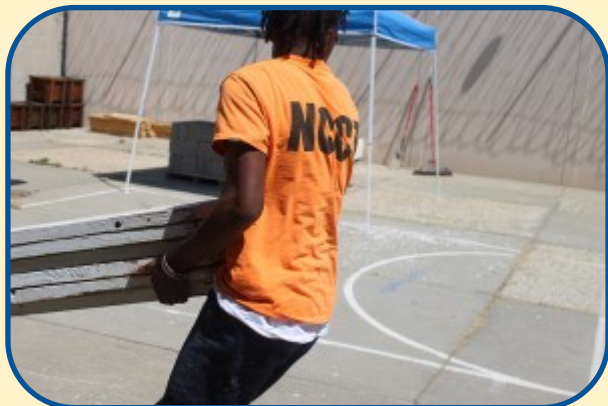

This month in the NCCT program, students demonstrated outstanding growth, discipline, and hands-on trade skills through a dynamic mix of physical challenges and construction projects.

Students kicked off June by completing Patriotic Flag builds in anticipation of the 4th of July. This creative project encouraged teamwork, attention to detail, and pride in craftsmanship, resulting in vibrant, meaningful displays that reflect both individual effort and collective spirit.

A major highlight of the month was the quarterly Laborer's Agility Test, where students pushed themselves physically and mentally to meet real world labor standards. Their determination and effort were impressive, and we're proud to announce the new "Top 8," a recognition given to those who excelled in strength, endurance, and agility. This distinction celebrates hard work and sets a high bar of excellence for the rest of the cohort.

Most recently, students applied their technical skills in a hands on Campfire Stool build. Using cut sheets and assembly diagrams, they measured, cut, and assembled stools using chop saws, tape measures, and a variety of hand and power tools. This project reinforced their understanding of construction fundamentals while also building confidence in tool use, precision, and following technical plans.

June has been a powerful month of learning, growth, and achievement. These students are not only gaining valuable trade skills, they're developing the mindset, work ethic, and resilience needed for long-term success.

Culinary Arts Program

For the month of June, Culinary began their Summer Cohort on June 10th. During the first week, Chef Doolittle discussed the syllabus and classroom expectations during the morning session. In the afternoon, Chef Doolittle conducted a food and taste experiment using jellybeans. He had the students plug their noses and eat a jellybean. The students experienced the jellybean lacking flavor until they unplugged their nose and the taste of the jellybean became apparent. Chef Doolittle explained how we need oxygen and saliva working together for our taste buds and our brain to identify flavors on our tongues.

During week two, students rolled up their sleeves and got hands on with baking as they learned to make zucchini bread. Under Chef Doolittle's guidance, they practiced accurate measuring techniques using cups and spoons before following a step-by-step recipe to prepare and bake the bread from scratch.

During week three, the Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday students made French onion soup paired with freshly baked baguette slices. They focused on knife skills, sautéing, and oven baking techniques.

The Thursday advanced class tackled a more complex dish, shrimp gumbo. Students developed flavor-building skills through sautéing, simmering, and combining multiple ingredients to bring the hearty dish together.
